Oil from a pipeline leak coats a pond near Sundre, Alta., on Friday. Plains Midstream Canada says one of their non-functioning pipelines leaked between 1,000 to 3,000 barrels of oil. JEFF MCINTOSH/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Oil spill could have been worse: Officials

Good luck. Recent rain washed oil to reservoir where it can be contained easier

A representative for the company whose pipeline spilled hundreds of thousands of litres of oil into an Alberta river suggests there were two strokes of luck that kept the problem from being worse.

Stephen Bart, the vice-president of crude oil operations for Plains Midstream Canada, says the first piece of good luck was that the pipeline wasn't flowing at the time.

Bart says the second was that the Red Deer River was swollen with recent rain, which washed the oil to the Gleniffer Reservoir where it can be more easily contained by booms, leaving only localized pockets of oil on the river.

"While there is shoreline along the river that has been impacted, it has been confined largely to a number of these localized areas, that when we get cordoned off, we can address more fully," Bart told reporters Sunday.

Plains Midstream Canada estimates between 1,000 and 3,000 barrels of oil spilled Thursday. There's no word yet on what caused the leak, but Bart told the news conference that the affected section of pipeline ran underneath the river.

Peter Hodson, a biology professor at Queen's University and an expert on the effects of oil spills on fish and wildlife, says it's promising that few struggling or injured animals have been spotted. He says it's also good news for fish if the oil managed to get to the lake quickly before being churned up in the river.

But Hodson says the fact the water level in the river was high means grass and other land that's farther up on the riverbank is more likely to have been coated with oil. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Young girls injured

Two dog attacks keep animal services occupied

Animal services had a busy Sunday, attending to two unrelated dog bites in northwest Calgary.

The first occurred in the playground of Silver Springs School, where two Huskies were running at large. One jumped and dragged down a five-year old girl, with its jaws clamped around the child's neck.

"Fortunately a good Samaritan passerby saw it, intervened and dragged the dog off," said Bill Bruce, director of bylaw and animal services, adding the dogs' owner wasn't at the scene and it's believed the dogs escaped from their yard.

Police and EMS responded with animal services and the girl was taken to hospital with non-life-threatening injuries and she was undergoing surgery Sunday afternoon.

The two dogs have been impounded, and the owner, who lives in the area, has been located.

Bruce said background checks on the dogs — including vaccine history — were being conducted. He said he believes one of the dogs has bitten before.

A separate incident took place in Tuscany, with minor injuries to another young girl. That dog, a Weimaraner, was also off-leash in a prohibited area.

"It's irresponsible ownership; it's not taking control over the dog," Bruce said. "There is no reason that a properly controlled, properly supervised dog should find itself in that situation."

Bruce said while they are tracking normal numbers for dog bites at this time of year, the recent bites in Calgary have all happened over a short period of time.

Calgarians walk to fight arthritis

$106,000. Hundreds of supporters came out for the Walk to Fight Arthritis, a Canada-wide event that raises money for research and programs

ALICIA GERRIOR

Mayor Nenshi and Mrs. Canada, Sophie Neufeld, kicked off the Arthritis Society's third annual Walk to Fight Arthritis yesterday at Fish Creek Park.

The event brought out 469 people who were determined to walk, rain or shine, in support of the nearly 4.5 million Canadians suffering from arthritis. The walk raised $106,000, which will go towards finding a cure for the debilitating disease.

"We need drugs that work without a lot of really bad side effects," said Dianna Schmidt, who walked in support of her husband, who has spondylitis, a type of inflammatory arthritis and an auto-immune disease.

Arthritis affects 34 per cent of Albertans, and, contrary to popular belief, not everyone with the disease is over 65. Sixty per cent of those suffering from the disease are of working age, and one in 1,000 children has arthritis.

The Arthritis Society has contributed more than $175 million towards finding a cure and improving the lives of those living with the disease.

"Through our work, the lives of people with arthritis are getting better," said Shirley Philips, executive director of the Arthritis Society Alberta.

Health. Boil-water advisory still in effect in three NW communities Residents are still being told to boil water in three north-west Calgary communities — Kincora, Nolan Hill and Sage Hill — but the advisory was removed in Hamptons, Hidden Valley and Sherwood.

The advisory, issued due to high sediment levels in the drinking-water pipes, will remain in place until the issue is resolved and testing confirms water quality has been restored.

City crews have been continually flushing the system, and the process is expected to continue into early next week.

The high sediment levels occurred in an isolated portion of the drinking-water pipes.

The drinking water flowing through the city's two water-treatment plants, which supply water to the entire city, continues to be of high quality. METRO

Homeless pets get full treatment free

Help. City services and private clinic give low-income animals and owners a helping hand

TESSA CLAYTON
calgary@metronews.ca

Some pets of Calgary's homeless and low-income individuals got a clean bill of health and city approval on Sunday.

For a second year, the Harvest Hills Veterinary Clinic provided free food, vaccinations, checkups and other vet services to pet owners, with city bylaw offering free neuter and spay services, as well as micro-chipping and registration.

"It's trying to reach those people that are less fortunate and don't have the ability to get to veterinary clinics and help out their best friends, who are very important to them and the most important thing in their lives in a lot of cases," said Dr. Les McCurdy, owner of the clinic.

The idea stemmed from a conversation a vet tech at the clinic had with friend and Drop-In manager Peter Arsenault about the DI's clients who have pets.

Pets aren't allowed in the facility, but some clients do own animals.

"When (clients are) in the presence of an animal, it's a different dynamic," said Arsenault. "Even a few minutes of petting a dog brings a smile to a client's face."

Besides the public-safety risk of pets that may not be up to spec on vaccinations, the program aims to give owners peace of mind when it comes to their friend's health.

"It's a godsend," said one pet owner, whose two Chihuahuas got full treatment

Clinic facts:

- The clinic collaborated with the Calgary Police Service, non-profits and city bylaw to get the word out to the targeted public.
- Harvest Hills has been donating animal food and treats to the DI since 2004.
- Last year, only about five animals were treated; this year, they expected to see about a dozen.

Montreal subway keeps running despite Grand Prix disruption threat

Student uprising. Police criticized for 'preventative' measures that kept potential protesters away from race site on island

Montreal police clamped down on any attempt to disrupt the subway line running to the city's Formula One Grand Prix race Sunday, arresting 34 people and forcing dozens more from the off-shore island where the race was held.

There were no major incidents despite plans by an anti-capitalist group — and promoted on a student association website — to disrupt the subway line that shuttled thousands of fans to the Circuit Gilles-Villeneuve.

Officers were posted at throughout the subway system, with sniffer dogs and a line of police at the station only steps from the track. But police were criticized for searches and arrests that police called "a preventive measure."

"Some of those arrested were people police recognized from earlier student demonstrations that had been deemed illegal," district commander Alain Simoneau told reporters. "In the interest of public safety, we decided to detain these people."

Masks, rocks and knives were among the objects seized. Most of those arrested will be released without charge, while others arrested in neighbouring suburbs could be charged, Simoneau said.

Police presence was high leading up to the race. A Canadian Press reporter who didn't have a Grand Prix ticket wasn't allowed onto the island where the race was being held and was instead forced back onto the subway along with several other people.

Several people, many of them wearing red squares, the emblem of the student movement, were seen being forcibly escorted back onto the subway by police. One young woman in tears said she was planning to get her ticket when she met up with a friend in front of the track. The woman, who had dyed red hair, accused the police of "profiling." Police said about 40 people were forced back in all.

There has been a heightened police presence throughout the four-day Grand Prix festivities in downtown Montreal and at the racetrack itself.

Pink-canoe portage fights breast cancer

There's a man wandering around Ontario with a pink canoe on his head, and he's many miles away from water. But don't worry, he's not lost — he's just on a portage to raise money to fight breast cancer.

"Every day I walk until I reach my goal — 20 or 30 kilometres — and then I set up camp in an area where I won't get kicked off or where I have permission to stay," said Andrew Metcalfe during a pit stop in Ottawa on Sunday. He began his trek June 3 in Kingston, Ont. and plans to head all the way to Windsor in southwestern Ontario. Metcalfe was six when his mom battled breast cancer, and the Canadian Cancer Society offered his family a lot of help. Fifteen years on she's still in remission, and it's time he gave something back, he said. So far, he has raised about $2,500. All funds raised through his website, pinkportage.com, will go to the society.

For Wallenda, Niagara walk is a dream come true

Nik Wallenda can't visit a new place without envisioning a wire strung high above his head. Even as a six-year-old at Niagara Falls with his parents, he pictured walking a tightrope over the raging water.

Now 33, he's ready to live out that childhood fantasy when he attempts Friday to become the first person to walk a tightrope directly over the brink of Niagara Falls.

"It's just natural," Wallenda, a seventh-generation member of the famed Flying Wallendas, explained. "When I drive into a city, I'm always thinking, It would be cool to do a walk there. It's just the way I think and always have."

Since first stepping on a wire when he was two, Wallenda, who lives in Sarasota, Fla., has earned six Guinness World Records. His family has been performing for audiences at circus-style shows for more than 200 years.

set for Friday night, above an almost 60-metre drop and through potentially high winds and vision-obscuring mist, will be unlike anything he's ever done. Because it's over water, the two-inch wire won't have the usual stabilizer cables to keep it from swinging. Pendulum anchors are designed to keep it from twisting under his elk-skin-soled shoes on the 550-metre walk from the U.S. shore to Canada.

"The thing about this cable, it's unique to me even, and because of that I'll be very, very focused on it," he said.

Kim Phuc was only nine years old when she was photographed fleeing a napalm strike on her village in South Vietnam on June 8, 1972.

The image of her running naked down a road captured worldwide attention and later won a Pulitzer Prize.

Recovering from the physical and emotional wounds she suffered took years, Kim Phuc said, thanking the journalists, nurses, doctors and loved ones who came to her aid in the decades since the bombing.

Budget. Potential for long week as Speaker set to rule on stall tactics

Really big bill

The 400-plus pages of legislation amends some 70 laws, including the process for environmental assessment and the rules around old age security and Employment Insurance.

Opposition politicians throwing hundreds of amendments at the Conservatives' omnibus budget bill are set to find out which ones are going to stick.

What could be a marathon week in the House of Commons begins Monday, with the Speaker expected to decide how over 1,000 changes proposed to Bill C-38, the government's budget implementation bill, will be dealt with in the House.

The government argues all legislation contained within the bill is to the economic benefit of the country, but critics say jamming so many major changes into a single bill means they aren't getting the scrutiny they require.

But with a Conservative majority, the bill is set to pass, so all the Opposition parties have pulled procedural rabbits out of their hats.

The New Democrats and the Liberals gave notice of over 1,000 amendments seeking to delete various clauses of the bill. Technically, a vote is required on each one, which could keep the Commons sitting, around the clock, for days.

"The content is flawed in many respects and they just want to bulldoze through the whole process," said NDP deputy finance critic Guy Caron.

Both parties had also suggested changes at the committee studying the bill, but those were rejected by the Tories.

On Monday, the Liberals will try anew, asking for elements relating to fisheries, environmental assessment, EI and old age security removed and introduced as separate legislation.

Conservative House Leader Peter Van Loan suggested the government may look at some of the proposed changes, but argued the lion's share are merely procedural games.

Rookie MP moonlights to maintain medical credentials

"What do I want to be when I grow up?"

Dr. Kellie Leitch repeats the cheeky question aloud, laughing easily as she buys time for a response.

For the rookie Conservative MP from Ontario, rising star in the government ranks and parliamentary secretary to the minister of labour, it is no idle inquiry.

Her career paths seem limitless.

Leitch, 41, is being interviewed at the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario, where she moonlights as a volunteer pediatric orthopedic surgeon between parrying questions in the House of Commons, voting on bills, arguing policy on committees and travelling to her Simcoe-Grey riding for constituency work.

Her unpaid time at the hospital, known as CHEO, allows Leitch to maintain her surgeon's credentials while she masters the art of electoral politics.

"I don't know if I was confident that I'd always be able to keep a foot in both worlds, but I always was hopeful that I would," Leitch says of her decision to seek office.

When she won the nomination after the downfall and expulsion of Helena Guergis from the Conservative caucus, Leitch says people regularly raised the problem of physician shortages and whether she could better serve the public in her trained profession.

In order to maintain her credentials, Leitch visits the hospital two or three mornings a week for rounds before reporting to her day job at 9 a.m.

Syrian opposition group selects secular Kurd leader

Syrian National Council. International community looks to party to mobilize and oust President Bashar Assad

Syria's main opposition group on Sunday picked a secular Kurd as its new leader after criticism that the former head was too autocratic and the group was becoming dominated by Islamists.

The opposition, hobbled by disorganization and infighting, is trying to pull together and appear more inclusive by choosing a member of an ethnic minority.

The opposition's disarray has frustrated Western powers eager to dislodge Syrian President Bashar Assad but unwilling, or unable, to send in their own forces to do it. There has been some willingness to support the rebels with funds and arms, but the lack of a cohesive front or a single address has hampered the efforts as the bloodshed intensifies.

On Sunday, government forces shelled rebel-held cities and villages, killing at least 38 people in the rebellious Homs district in central Syria, activists said. It was impossible to independently confirm the death toll.

The UN's latest estimate, dating back to April, was that 9,000 people had died in the 15-month conflict. The UN has been unable to update the figure since. Syrian activists put the toll at more than 13,000.

The choice of Abdulbasit Sieda as head of the Syrian National Council is aimed at achieving several goals for the main opposition group.

1. Under outgoing leader Burhan Ghalioun, criticism mounted that the group was dominated by Islamists, especially the Muslim Brotherhood. Sieda is a secular.

2. Sieda is also a Kurd, and his selection could be an incentive for Syria's minority

Women walk next to a destroyed military tank in the northern town of Ariha, Syria, Sunday. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kurds to take a more active role in the uprising. Up to now they have stayed mostly on the sidelines.

3. Selection of a member of a minority group could counter criticism that, under Ghalioun, the umbrella organization was too autocratic. Sieda is seen as a neutral consensus figure.

"This is clearly an opportunity and there is clearly a need for a change," said Peter Harling of the International Crisis Group think-tank.

The SNC must also gain the confidence of the international community, which is searching for effective ways to hasten the departure of Assad.

Increasing instability

British consider Syria intervention

British Foreign Secretary William Hague said Sunday that he couldn't rule out a military intervention in Syria, saying the situation there was beginning to resemble the violence that gripped Bosnia in the 1990s.

Hague told Sky News television that time was now "clearly running short" to implement international envoy Kofi Annan's cease-fire plan in Syria, and that Britain was already turning its eye toward what it would do if the plan failed.

Maddening lines get worse at Heathrow

Britain. Olympics only 50 days away and Brits worry tourists may not keep a stiff upper lip about the really long queues at airport

The first taste of British life for most travellers landing at Heathrow Airport these days is the queue.

That long line snaking back and forth to passport control can be maddening, and even the British — masters at manners when it comes to waiting in line — are beginning to lose their patience.

All the bad news about lines last month sparked concerns about the fate of tourists arriving for the Olympics.

'Listen up'

Take Joan Collins: The actress who describes herself on her Twitter feed as "Much Travelled. Exhausted," was shocked when she passed through Heathrow last month. She had a message for Home Secretary, Theresa May. "Arrived LHR after great trip on @British Airways but 1000s waiting at passport control - listen up Ms. May - need more officers!"

With the games less than 50 days away, the bad press about lines unsettled British authorities, who have been falling all over themselves to make sure that everything is ready and moving smoothly for the sporting extravaganza.

More people than ever used Heathrow last year — nearly 70 million passengers — straining an arrivals process that relies on traditional, staffed immigration desks, according to Ben Vogel, the editor of IHS Jane's Airport Review.

Those lines have been blamed on the government, the airline schedules — and even the wind.

The relentless bad publicity has been painful for Heathrow, even though it is the border agency, not the airport operator, that is responsible for slimming down the lines.

People who are waiting complain that desks aren't always manned, even as the numbers grow.

Two-thirds of Irish Catholics don't accept a core belief: Poll

About 12,000 Catholics gathered for an open-air

A poll of Irish Catholics found that two-thirds don't believe this.

Rare letter in English by Napoleon dated 1816 sells at auction

In poor English. The one-page letter was a homework exercise; it sold for five times what was predicted

An illuminating letter written by Napoleon in English sold at auction Sunday for 325,000 euros or $410,000 US.

It offers a window into the mind of the French emperor, struggling with syntax of the language of enemy Britain.

The standard-sized sheet of paper is a homework exercise Napoleon sent to an English teacher for correction and was sealed with the imperial eagle wax stamp.

It's one of three such English-language letters by Napoleon in the world, according to the auction organizers, and was bought by Paris' Museum of Letters and Manuscripts in a dramatic bidding war near the Chateau of Fontainebleau, one of Napoleon's south of Paris.

The selling price — five times what was predicted — suggests the document's historic value, as rare proof that Napoleon, who famously dismissed England as a "nation of shopkeepers," learned to speak the language of Shakespeare late in life.

He wrote the letter while a captive on the remote island of Saint Helena following his defeat at Waterloo, according to the Osenat auction house.

The letter begins: "It's two o'clock after midnight, I have now sleep, I go then finish the night with you."

Napoleon addressed the letter to the Count Las Cases, his teacher, "at his bonk" — thought to be the word "bunk" misspelled.

In a moment of surprising humility, Napoleon Bonaparte asks his teacher in the letter to indulge him and correct his mistakes.

The document offers insight into the puzzle of who Napoleon became when imprisoned.

Egypt government pulls xenophobic ads

TV spots. Public-service announcements, called 'deceptive' by one activist, encourage suspicion of foreigners

Egypt's government has pulled TV public-service announcements that warned against talking to foreigners because they might be spies, after critics charged the spots fuelled xenophobia and aimed to tarnish those behind last year's uprising.

The two spots ran on state and private television stations for a few days before Minister of Information Ahmed Anis ordered them off the air, a media official said Sunday.

One opens with a blond-haired young man scanning a café while a narrator says:

"From the beginning, he knows why he is here and sets up his goal. He won't have to spend much time getting to know the people in the place."

The foreigner then spots three young Egyptians and heads over to them, saying in broken Arabic: "I love you so much." The narrator says: "Our generosity has no limits" as one of the Egyptians stands up, shakes hands and invites the foreigner to sit with them.

It goes on to show the visitor smiling slyly and narrowing his eyes while listening intently to the Egyptians complaining about the economy and talking about overhearing a plot against the ruling military council. The narrator warns Egyptians not to share with outsiders their woes about the economy or political situation.

Some among the public have mixed feelings about foreigners. At the same time, they worry about losing the country's main source of income, tourism. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mubarak's health 'in decline'

Hosni Mubarak is slipping in and out of consciousness eight days after the ousted Egyptian leader was sent to prison to begin serving a life sentence, a security official said on Sunday.

With rumours of the former president's death spreading rapidly, authorities granted his wife, former first lady Suzanne Mubarak, and the couple's two daughters-in-law special permission to visit him in Cairo's Torah prison early that morning.

"The former president's health is in decline, but now it's stable in its deteriorated state," the official said. Since his wife's visit, Mubarak has suffered from an irregular heartbeat and required assistance in breathing.

The official said that the former president now lives only on liquids and yogurt. He spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak to the media.

Authorities have turned down requests by Mubarak's family to transfer the ousted president back to a military facility. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Apple CEO Tim Cook is expected to show off new iPhone software, updated Mac computers and provide more details on future releases of Mac software when he kicks off the company's annual conference for software developers on Monday.

The announcement of new software for the iPhone, iPad and iPod Touch has been confirmed by banners that appeared at the Moscone conference centre in San Francisco on Friday, reading "iOS 6."

Apple has for the past few years used its Worldwide Developers Conference as an opportunity to announce new iPhone software.

What's not known is what new features will come with iOS 6, or when it will be released to consumers. Usually, the new software becomes available for download around the time a new iPhone model appears.

Apple-watchers expect the next version of the iPhone, the iPhone 5, to appear this fall, about a year after the launch of the 4S model.

In 2010, Apple demonstrated the new iPhone 4 at the WWDC, but analysts don't expect the company to show off a phone model this year.

With the launch of iOS 5 last year, Apple added many features already found in competing smart-phone software. It also added the "Siri" virtual-assistant feature, which interprets voice commands and talks back to the user.

This year, there are fewer "catch-up" features to add, so Apple watchers expect more modest improvements.

Some speculate that Facebook could become more tightly integrated, in much the same way that Apple baked Twitter functions into its software last year.

That could make it easier to post Facebook status updates from within Apple's apps.

On the Mac software side, there are fewer unknowns. Apple already demonstrated most of the features of OS X 10.8 "Mountain Lion" in February and said it will go on sale late this summer.

Debt crisis. Spain becomes the fourth and largest country to ask eurogroup to rescue its failing banks

Spain's grinding economic misery will get worse this year, despite the country's request for a European financial lifeline of up to $125 billion US to save its banks, Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy said Sunday.

A day after the country conceded it needed outside help following months of denying it would seek assistance, Rajoy said more Spaniards will lose their jobs in a country where

"This year is going to be a bad one," Rajoy said Sunday in his first comments about the rescue since it was announced the previous evening by his economy minister.

The conservative prime minister added that the economy, stuck in its second recession in three years, will still contract the previously predicted 1.7 per cent even with the help.

Spain on Saturday became the fourth — and largest — of the 17 countries that use Europe's common currency to request a bailout — a big blow to a nation that a few years ago took pride as the continent's economic superstar only to see it become the hot spot in the eurozone debt crisis. Its economy is the eurozone's fourth largest after Germany, France and Italy.

Although Spain has not yet said how much money it would seek, the eurogroup — finance ministers of the 17-country eurozone — said in a statement Saturday that it was prepared to lend up to $125 billion.

Doctors defy technophobe image with texts, tweets

There's a stereotype that says doctors shun technology that might threaten patients' privacy and their own pocket-books.

But a new breed of physicians are texting health messages to patients, tracking disease trends on Twitter, identifying medical problems on Facebook pages and communicating with patients through email.

So far, those numbers are small. Many doctors still cling to pen and paper, and are most comfortable using e-technology to communicate with each other — not with patients.

But from the U.S.'s top public-health agency, to medical clinics in the heartland, some physicians realize patients want more than a 15-minute office visit and callback at the end of the day.

Far from Silicon Valley and East Coast high-tech hubs, Kansas City pediatrician Natasha Burgert offers child-rearing tips on her blog, Facebook and Twitter pages, and answers patients' questions by email and text messages.

"These tools are embedded in my work day," Burgert said.

TIME TO LAY THE MAN CARDS ON THE TABLE

HIGH PLAINS
DRIFTER
James Callisen
calgary@metronews.ca

"Dude, he needs to turn in his man card for that."

How many times have you heard that phrase in the past year or two?

It seems like everywhere I turn, be it on social media or in conversation with friends and co-workers, there's always some kind of discussion on whether a man is a "man" or not.

There's always some offending action or deed that leads to such a dissection from other men (and, more commonly, from women) on the validity of someone's "man card."

Am I the only one who thinks that a man is someone who has the necessary parts (barring dysmorphia)?

Why is it that men are so quick to deny another his validity?

Wear Lululemon pants? Turn in your man card. Enjoy shopping for clothes? Turn in your man card. Take pride in your appearance? Turn in your man card. Can't repair an automobile? Turn in your man card. Can't build a campfire? Turn in your man card.

Times are changing

"There's no reason to be talking smack and running a dude down just because he doesn't fit your idea of masculinity."

Believe it or not, guys, times are changing.

For starters, we're no longer sole breadwinners.

If you pay attention to the stats, more women are out-earning men than ever before, and those numbers likely aren't going to reverse themselves anytime soon.

That means "women's work" is now just "work."

Where women are leaving the kitchen and the laundry room, more and more men are taking up the detergent and the frying pan.

The definition of a man is changing from a hyper-macho, post-war ideal into something different, but no less important, than before.

We are still protectors, husbands, boyfriends, friends and fathers.

But that doesn't mean that we can't cook, clean, work hard, play hard and look damn good doing it.

There's no reason to be talking smack and running a dude down just because he doesn't fit your idea of masculinity. Quite honestly, you look afraid, sad and insecure.

Whether you wear Lululemon, Carhartts or Hugo Boss, it's up to us to look after those around us whether it's in our family or in our community.

And while gender roles are changing, it doesn't mean our role is any less diminished.

So celebrate your bros, educate yourself and open your eyes before you get left behind.

Worth mentioning

Endangered whale bouncing back after ships rerouted

The population of a once nearly extinct whale is on the rise, partly because of an unlikely collaboration between a Canadian oil company and an aquarium.

Ten years ago, New Brunswick-based Irving Oil rerouted its shipping lanes in the Bay of Fundy to move away from the feeding grounds of the North Atlantic right whale, reducing the risk of collisions.

It's a move that scientists say has played a great role in the recovery of the endangered species.

Dr. Moira Brown, a senior scientist at the New England Aquarium in Boston, said in the past decade, the right-whale population has grown by an average of two per cent annually, from about 350 whales to more than 450.

"The animals were so few in number when we started doing this that we were literally trying to reduce mortality one whale at a time," said Brown, whose aquarium continues to work with Irving to monitor the recovery of the whales.

"So this is huge."

Pedicure shops set foot in Iraq

An Iraqi man immerses his feet in a fish tank with Garra rufa, also known as doctor fish, at Baghdad's first fish-pedicure salon in Iraq on Sunday. The latest luxury spa in Iraq's capital offers another small sign of life creeping closer to normalcy, if your definition of "normal" includes having tiny fish nibble on your feet.

The salon aims to bring in Iraqi customers who have recently begun to venture out again as the violence that engulfed the country after the 2003 U.S.-led invasion ebbs.

Curb appeal

Spa located near security checkpoint

Violence in Baghdad has dropped sharply in recent years, after a wave of sectarian attacks that pushed the country to the brink of civil war. The wealthy Mansour neighbourhood near Musbah Saleh's spa saw some of the worst of the sectarian carnage.

Just down the street from Doctor's Fish Spa, there is a police checkpoint — one of dozens across Baghdad — with concrete barriers, rolls of barbed wire and armed police. Far from scaring customers off, the checkpoint was part of the location's appeal, Saleh says. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The cuddly critters of Madagascar 3: Europe's Most Wanted led the weekend with a $60.4 million debut, followed by a big opening for Ridley Scott's alien saga Prometheus at No. 2 with $50 million. DreamWorks Animation's Madagascar 3 was the family favourite for the weekend, reuniting voice stars Ben Stiller, Chris Rock, Jada Pinkett Smith and David Schwimmer as the zoo animals continue their travels by joining a circus. Prometheus, from 20th Century Fox, stars Noomi Rapace, Michael Fassbender and Charlize Theron in an offshoot of director's Scott's 1979 science-fiction horror tale Alien.

Metric find their system

New album. Band parlays their success into making music on their own terms — and gets experimental on Synthetica

scene@metronews.ca

It's a well-worn cliché: emerging indie band with big buzz but few resources faces umpteen struggles along the way before finally breaking through and becoming a bona fide international success.

But despite their steady rise, Metric have always refused to take the expected route — while other bands in their position may have succumbed to the pressures that go hand-in-hand with crossing over into the mainstream, they decided to leverage their success a slightly different way — by making their next album entirely on their own terms.

The band's new record, Synthetica, offers a sleek digital-meets-analogue twist on the quartet's signature synth-pop — fans looking for a repeat of the shiny stadium anthems of 2009's Fantasies (which sold over 1 million singles and nearly 500,000 copies worldwide) might be slightly nonplussed, but to hear singer Emily Haines tell it, success equalled more creative freedom.

"You have to really have it together on all fronts," she notes.

"It's pretty challenging to navigate the business side and the sonic side — the music you want to create, who you want to work with, the live element. So it feels like we've slowly but surely made progress in all those areas over the years, and it feels good to be heading in the direction we always hoped to."

Aside from releasing their music entirely independently through their own label via various international partnerships, another piece of the puzzle was establishing their own studio at home in Toronto — being able to hunker down amidst guitarist-producer Jimmy Shaw's growing arsenal of vintage gear and instruments proved to be the key catalyst in defining Synthetica's sound.

"It's interesting with those instruments, because when they were invented, they were associated with the future. And now here we are in the supposed future, and those instruments actually sound really charming — they don't sound alien at all."

From the robotic stomp of first single Youth Without Youth (which quickly became the first single to ever debut at No. 1 on the Canadian Media-base alternative radio chart) to the buzzy synths propelling surefire hit The Void, Synthetica paints a portrait of a modern era too preoccupied with keeping up than it is with taking stock.

"It's our examination of what's real and what's artificial," Haines explains.

"So it's a lot about looking back to look forward — it's not really so much about reminiscing as trying to get a handle on things so you can figure out which direction to take."

Mapping out their own route — literally and figuratively — will be a major part of Metric's preoccupations over the next year as the band hits the road across the globe in support of the new album ("You'd laugh if you saw the giant wall calendar that is our lives right now," Haines quips) while also managing the responsibilities that come with being in charge of their own creative and business interests.

"We seem to be living in exponential times, where things are changing so rapidly — obviously not just in music, but in all sectors of technology," Haines says. "It's sort of more fun to be on the side where we're on, where we can be in the moment and try and experiment with things that haven't been done before, as opposed to trying to hold on to the way things used to be."

"But we're up for the whole thing — we feel like we're doing exactly what we're meant to do."

Seth Green THE CANADIAN PRESS

100 episodes later, Robot Chicken is still going strong

An unlikely hit. Seth Green surprised his hilarious 'side project' is now on its sixth season

When Seth Green launched Robot Chicken back in 2005, he thought the same thing most viewers likely did — that the scattershot animated gag machine was a fun diversion destined for a TV lifespan not much longer than one of its pithy sketches.

So with the 100th episode of the Emmy-winning trouble-making-with-toys comedy set to air on Teletoon this Sunday night, the 38-year-old is as surprised as anyone by the manic show's longevity.

"It's super surreal," marvelled the upbeat Green in a recent telephone interview.

"Because this was just never meant to be something that actually was a show, let alone a series, let alone a long-running series. This was such a side project. This was such a silly thing that we wanted to make.

"It evolved into something that other people were watching, and so we realized we were making it for all of us."

The stop-motion sketch series arrived in February 2005. Grown from a short-lived web series produced by Green and Robot Chicken co-creator Matthew Senreich, the show was aired on Adult Swim before that property became a cross-platform cartoon titan producing TV shows, video games and music.

Back then, it wasn't even its own network, but just a programming block on the Cartoon Network.

"We didn't expect anything," said Green. "Adult Swim was really just taking shape. We weren't even sure if the network was going to be around in a couple months."

"And we had no idea what we were doing," he added, noting that the show's producers initially took on an overly ambitious production schedule. "I actually had a physical breakdown toward the end of that year."

With Robot Chicken, Green and Senreich let their childhood obsession with toys fuel a rapid-fire melange of imaginatively bawdy jokes steeped in geek culture — one sketch of thousands, for instance, depicts a Star Wars stormtrooper bringing his poor daughter onto the Death Star during "take your kids to work day."

Over five seasons, the show has welcomed a stunning array of Hollywood A-listers into its cracked world, including Sarah Michelle Gellar, Mila Kunis, Snoop Dogg, Megan Fox, Scarlett Johansson, Conan O'Brien, Ryan Seacrest and Charlize Theron.

But perhaps the biggest boon to the show's fortune was timing. Less than a week before Robot Chicken hit the airwaves, YouTube launched and suddenly seized upon and furthered the Internet's collectively voracious desire for short-form content. And Robot Chicken's snickering snippets were the perfect fit.

It was a coincidence that looked like prescience, Green says. "Isn't that weird? It makes us look like we really knew what the hell what we were talking about," he said with a laugh. "No, we just didn't have money to shoot anything longer than four minutes, so we developed rapid-fire short-term content.

"When Robot Chicken came around, we originally called it ADD TV, because we thought that was what it was — it was jokes without a laborious setup, all punch lines. It's straight to the point."

Green and his collaborators are currently in the process of piecing together the sixth season of the show (which airs earlier in the U.S. than it does here in Canada), although he's focusing his effort on directing a one-time Robot Chicken special set in the DC Comics universe.

Television. Gilmore Girls creator welcomes comparisons to new show Bunheads

Fans of the well-loved mother-daughter dramedy Gilmore Girls may get a sense of déjà vu when tuning into creator Amy Sherman-Palladino's new show Bunheads.

There's the crackerjack dialogue delivered at breakneck pace, the languidly winsome acoustic music and an idyllic small-town crammed with lovably unique oddballs. And at the centre of it all, there's a corrosively clever, leggy brunette occasionally butting heads with a matriarch played by Gilmore vet Kelly Bishop.

While Sherman-Palladino emphasizes the differences between the two shows, she agrees that such comparisons don't exactly ring hollow.

"I would be kind of a moron if I thought that automatically there were not going to be any comparisons between this show and Gilmore," said Sherman-Palladino in a telephone interview from her home in California this week. "I have a very specific style of writing ... and directing and producing a show.

"I don't want to do the show of long looks ... and a lot of dramatic scoring in the background while the heroine in her billowing skirts walks slowly — I will have already hung myself from a shower rod if I was doing a show like that," she added.

"I like snap, I like pace, I like energy, I like a lot of comedy in my dramas.... My hope is that Gilmore fans will find enough things that they enjoyed about Gilmore that they can bring to this, and yet sort of new fun relationships to get invested in."

And with due respect to the comfort-TV nirvana provided by the seven-season run of Gilmore Girls, Sherman-Palladino's new show seems to have come from an equally personal place.

The show — which premieres Monday on ABC Spark — revolves around Michelle Simms (played by two-time Tony winner Sutton Foster), a classically trained prima ballerina now firmly entrenched in a rut as a Las Vegas showgirl considered too old for meatier theatrical roles. On a whim, she impulsively marries an adoring stranger (played with hangdog sweetness by the perfectly cast Alan Ruck) and moves to his sleepy coastal town.

There, she butts heads with his close-at-hand mother-in-law, Fanny Flowers (Bishop), but bonds with the four young charges at the dance school Fanny runs from the house they now share.

Perry keeps it professional

With her marriage to Russell Brand falling apart, Katy Perry learned how to keep her personal problems backstage while touring last year, she explains to Graham Norton in an interview.

"I love being onstage, and even though I went through some pretty tough times last year, I had to separate that because I know my problems and they are not the audience's problems," Perry says.

"They are here to see a show and to be entertained, so I got on that lift, put a smile on my face and went up (onstage) with my t-s spinning." After her interview, Perry was spotted grabbing dinner with Florence + the Machine guitarist Robert Ackroyd, with whom she'd supposedly split up last month.

At the end of perhaps the world's most choreographed, awkward striptease, the singer flashed the audience of 55,000 her right nipple before ending the song with her hand down her pants.

Is she still sexy?

Of course. But she's now officially in the creepy aunt subsection.

Lindsay Lohan's car crash still happening

MONICA WEYMOUTH
scene@metronews.ca

Lindsay Lohan got into a nasty car accident in L.A. over the weekend, and because this is Lindsay Lohan, things are far from over.

The actress, who was driving, initially claimed that an 18-wheeler cut off her black Porsche, causing her to slam into the back of it and total her car.

We're not sure if the damage matches up to this story — we're not even sure we've ever seen a Porsche in one piece — but the driver of the truck tells TMZ that Lohan, who was speeding, caused the crash, then attempted to leave the scene while her assistants negotiated a bribe and removed the actress' belongings from the car.

"I'd already called 911 because they were trying to get away from the scene," the truck driver tells the site. "But they packed a bag and then the (assistant) told me, 'Don't mention the bag to the cops.'"

Lindsay, for her part, is sticking with her original story, but yesterday also floated the idea that the brakes on the Porsche, which was a rental, were recently replaced and failed. Lindsay, we realize you didn't have a normal adolescence, so allow us to explain how this works: When you irresponsibly smash up an expensive car that isn't yours, the correct response is to cry, call your mom and say "officer" a lot.

Rinse and repeat as necessary.

Jersey Shore star Snooki seems to be the latest celebrity to get her phone hacked and, surprise, there were nude photos on there.

The pictures, which were first posted to the blog Egotastic, show her — or, if we're entertaining a really dark world, an impersonator — in a hotel room and appear to be at least six months old.

We can't decide what's more upsetting: That we've seen Snooki naked, or that we can estimate how long ago she was naked.

Angelina attached to Fifty Shades adaptation?

The breakout erotic novel Fifty Shades of Grey may have found yet another fan with Angelina Jolie, who has reportedly been in talks to direct the film adaptation, according to Deadline.

Sources say Jolie has had "a conversation or two"

with Universal Pictures, the studio that won the rights to the smash book, though a source close to Jolie denies the story, saying Jolie is "completely focused on her next film, Maleficent, and isn't entertaining other offers at this moment."

Marijuana more popular than smokes

A U.S. government survey shows more teens are now smoking pot than cigarettes.

The Centres for Disease Control and Prevention reports that 23 per cent of high school students said they recently smoked marijuana, while 18 per cent said they puffed cigarettes. The survey asked teens about risky behaviours.

For decades, the number of teens who smoke has been on the decline. Marijuana has fluctuated, and recently rose. But last year marked the first time marijuana use was clearly greater.

Of 'stolen' baby names

Etiquette. What if someone got to your "special" one first?

SHAWNA COHEN
Mommyish.com

Just days after Blue Ivy entered the world, proud parents Beyoncé and Jay-Z trademarked their little girl's name. But guess what? You can still name your little bundle Blue Ivy if your heart desires (just don't go using that name on your line of hipster onesies).

Baby names are a free for all. Nobody owns the rights to a baby name — not your cubicle mate, your BFF or your very own sister who had the name "Zoe" picked out from birth. And it's about time people stopped accusing others of "stealing" their baby names. This isn't high school, people!

Recently, the Social Security Administration released its list of the top American baby names for 2011. As fascinating as the list itself is, some people are actually upset if their chosen baby name happens to have fallen on it. For example, the name Mason is in the No. 2 spot for boys — much to the dismay of parents who believe they personally invented/discovered that name (newsflash: you didn't!).

One Mommyish reader named Katie shared her own ridiculous baby name-stealing story. It goes like this: A girl in her daughter's class is named Isabelle. Isabelle's mom went nuts when a fellow mom named her second child Isla. She claims to have invented the name Isabelle and she felt that Isla was just a bit too similar. So Isabelle's mom flipped out at Isla's poor mom and accused her of stealing the name she magically created by combining Izzy and Belle. (Isabelle's mom, if you happen to be reading this: Get a grip, lady!)

Also this month, the New York Times devoted space to this very issue. One reader "Meghan" from St. Louis — wrote in with the following:

"I'm expecting my first child next month. We're naming our son Benjamin, a family name filled with meaning. I told my colleagues months ago. My assistant is also expecting her first child. She recently announced that she will name her son Benjamin, too. I approached her privately and told her I was upset. She thought I was being unreasonable, and told me she chose the name after me because she thought it was cute. What should I do?"

Meghan, too, was told to get a grip — thank God! (It was even recommended that she consider the name Nenjabim as an alternative, which cracked me up.)

My point is this: If you have an "original" baby name picked out, don't share it in advance. If you do share it in advance, don't be upset if someone else uses it.

Another point: If you hear a name that you like, go ahead and use it. Who cares if there are two Jaden's in the same playgroup? Chances are there will be two more in little Jaden's classroom, anyway, and another seven at your next door neighbour's birthday party.

QUEEN OF GREEN
Lindsay Coulter
green@metronews.ca

Is there such thing as green hotels? And if so how can I find one?

Dan of Toronto

Indeed, there are green hotels!

Many work to conserve resources like energy and water — by installing everything from energy-efficient lighting to low-flow shower heads. Other green hotels tackle waste and pollution with food waste composting, in-room recycling and using eco-friendly cleaning products.

One option is to search the Green Key Eco-Rating Program website at greenkey-global.com. They rate hotels and resorts in Canada, the U.S. and internationally on environmental performance.

Top Canadian Hotels (topcanadianhotels.com) also allows hotels to self-select as "green" by submitting an evaluation of their environmental performance — energy conservation, pollution prevention — to receive green leaves (one to five). However, it doesn't appear that the actions committed by the hotels are verified by another third party, or Top Canadian Hotels for that matter.

A leader in the green hotel movement has been the Fairmont Hotels & Resorts. In 1990, the company launched a Green Hotel Partnership Program to minimize its properties' carbon footprint. In Vancouver, the Fairmont Waterfront raises 500,000 honeybees on its rooftop and maintains a beautiful herb garden (excellent bee food), not to mention serving Ocean Wise seafood, organic wines and much more. They believe they can minimize their environmental impact while offering guests an outstanding experience! And why not?

A simple Internet search using "green hotel" and your destination city will likely reveal a few excellent choices. Be prepared to ask about what exactly makes them "green."

How to tell when you need a vacation

JULIA WEST

Metro World News in Philadelphia

Vacations: We always want one, but sometimes we actually need one.

Here's our rundown of telltale signs that you're in need of some well-deserved time off.

You are less productive

This may come as no surprise, but many Type A personalities tend to work without vacation — and without realizing that it can affect their productivity. "If you notice that you need to take a lot of breaks to accomplish work, that is a sign that the current demands on you are exceeding your resources," says

Your time off

Kerry Patterson, co-author of Crucial Conversations, reminds us that we must "define vacation" to ourselves and to our bosses.

"Talk about what it truly means to take time off. If you are required to take the office with you in the form of emails and conference calls, you never truly leave the office."

After you get the time off, don't spend it answering emails from a beach.

Marc Cenedella
CEO of The Ladders

"Do you find yourself getting short-tempered with the nicest person in the office?" asks Marc Cenedella, CEO of job-matching site The Ladders. If so, ask yourself if those people deserve to put up with that.

You dream about quitting

"This is obviously a sign that you are dissatisfied with your job," says Przeworski. "But before you jump ship, try taking a vacation or a day off to see if maybe you just needed a break and some self-care instead of a new position." The last thing you want is a permanent vacation.

"Employers value skills and internship experience more than the name on a diploma. Success is up to the individual."

Allison Singh
Author of Getting Over Not Getting In: A College Rejection Guide

Receiving a rejection letter to one, or a few, of your university applications is not uncommon.

With the number of applicants rising each year the competition is fierce if you want to secure a spot at one of the top universities in Canada.

So what happens when you receive that rejection letter and your dreams of walking across the graduation stage at (insert school name here) are dashed?

Allison Singh, author of Getting Over Not Getting In: A College Rejection Guide, offers advice on getting past the feelings of inadequacy and upset:

Remember that rejection will not hold you back

"But entering college full of bitterness and self-doubt will," says Singh,

"Research shows that these days it does not matter where students attend college, or at least not as much as they might think. Employers value skills and internship experience more than the name on a diploma. Success is up to the individual."

Respect your feelings

"Sometimes we minimize the sting of rejection or condescendingly tell students to just brush it off. This is unfair," Singh says. "In many ways, we have set students up for this by making the college admissions process the central focus of high school. I begin by reminding students that rejection is not an indicator of their ability or future success. They should be proud of what they accomplished in high school, regardless of where they end up."

Move forward

Singh suggests students to take another look at the schools that did accept them. "Visit the schools, talk to students. If they keep looking back at the school that said no, they will miss out on all of the opportunities at the school that said yes."

Breaking away from stereotypes

Motivating through movement. Young breakdancers put co-ordination, creativity to the test with fancy footwork

The wide-eyed kids file into the school gym just as 17-year-old Gezim Topalli drops to the floor and spins on his head like a child's top. "Whoa!" a few youngsters cry out, their eyes glued to the lithe boy with the muscular arms as he twists and turns effortlessly on the hard floor of Oldfield Consolidated Elementary in Enfield, N.S.

In an instant, a smirking Topalli is back on his feet, eager to teach his young audience the basics of breaking — or breakdancing, as it's commonly known — alongside his mentor, Drew Moore.

The duo is part of Concrete Roots, a Halifax-based program that uses breaking and hip hop to reach out to young people and encourage them to be themselves.

"We place a strong emphasis on creativity; you learn how to do a dance a certain way and then you're very much encouraged to break away from that and find your own style," says Moore, a professional B-boy and director of Concrete Roots.

"That's something that really appeals to a lot of kids. You see them light up."

The 32-year-old former teacher became interested in breaking after watching a music video by rap group Run DMC and DJ Jason Nevins as a teen.

The 1998 video for It's Like That features infectious beats and a high-octane dance battle between b-boys and b-girls.

Moore started teaching breaking in 2004 as a modest after-school program while working at a middle school in Milford, N.S. The program eventually expanded to schools in Halifax and has since held workshops and other programming as far away as Yukon.

Many of Concrete Roots' first students are now instructors with the program. They host free drop-in practices for anyone who wants to try their hand — and feet — at the intricate manoeuvres.

The program has also spawned several dance crews, including Eastern Bloc, made up of b-boys all originally from Eastern countries. Among its members is Topalli, who came to Canada from Kosovo as a child.

The Grade 12 student attended his first Concrete Roots lesson a couple of years ago with one goal in mind: learning to do a head spin.

"When I break, it feels good," says Topalli, who's since taken up salsa and other dance.

"It feels like I'm in the moment and everybody's having fun. It's a good vibe."

Using breakdancing as a means to engage youth some four decades later isn't unique to Concrete Roots.

Stephen Leafloor has been teaching breaking to youth in aboriginal communities for about six years as part of his program, Blueprint for Life. Recently, he began working with young aboriginal offenders at correctional facilities.

Beginnings of the break

Story behind the steps

• Breaking emerged from the gritty boroughs of New York City in the 1970s as a street-

based dance, and flourished as hip hop grew in popularity

• Dancers would duke it out in so-called battles, each one trying to outshine the other with an innovative move.

Dance to your own beat

"We place a strong emphasis on creativity; you learn how to do a dance a certain way and then you're very much encouraged to break away from that and find your own style."

Drew Moore
Director of Concrete Roots.

He says breaking is more than fancy footwork — it helps teach confidence and co-operation while celebrating youth and spontaneity.

"For us, it's about healing and it's a way of helping provide a modern-day survival tool kit for young people to use and adapt to their own culture and identity," says Leafloor, a social worker and b-boy.

"It's got so much flexibility: art, music, dance, passion, swagger."

Leafloor says his program doesn't accept the stereotypes often associated with hip hop culture. He chalks those misconceptions up to a lack of education.

"We don't buy into bling-bling and booty shaking and gangster rap," he says. "That's one of the very first things we talk to the kids about."

Moore says breaking is a freestyle form of dance that can provide kids with the structure they need.

"We're teaching them leadership skills and the idea of forming crews and having a positive support system will keep them on the right path," he says.

Spain's win streak ends against Italy

Euro 2012. Spaniards allow opening strike, but battle back to earn draw in opener

For Spain, it was a bit of a stumble. For Italy, it was a bit of a reprieve.

Beginning its bid for a third straight major title, the Spanish rallied to earn a 1-1 draw Sunday against Italy, which entered this year's European Championship amid another match-fixing scandal.

"Being the favourite now is complicated, but in the end we found the character," Fabregas said.

Spain, which followed up its Euro 2008 victory with the 2010 World Cup title, dominated the match for long stretches but struggled to finish at times, while Italy relied on dangerous counterattacks.

The draw ended a 14-match winning streak for Spain in competitive play.

Still, it could have been worse.

"I don't leave here frustrated because the effort we made to win this game was tremendous," Spain coach Vicente del Bosque said. "It was a good game, a different kind of game."

Spain pulled a surprise by starting with no recognized strikers in its lineup, with Fabregas at forward between

The field appears to be wide open as players begin to arrive in San Francisco for this week's U.S. Open. At the Olympic Club course, nothing ever seems to turn out as expected, similar to how many top golfers' seasons have gone thus far. Scan the code for the story.

WEATHER SPECIALIST

"I get to spread the word on how your day, evening or weekend will shape up with our ever-changing weather here in Alberta".
WEEKDAYS 5:30 AM

Horoscope

Aries | March 21 - April 20.

This is a good day for socializing, for spending quality time with your friends.

Taurus | April 21 - May 21.

Enjoy yourself today but make sure you know your limits and make sure you stay within them.

Gemini | May 22 - June 20.

Jupiter moves into your sign today, signaling the start of a more fortunate phase, but don't expect too much.

Cancer | June 21 - July 22.

You are under no obligation to work your fingers to the bone, nor are you obliged to rescue a friend or work colleague from a situation that is entirely of their own making.

Leo | July 23 - Aug. 22.

The

moment you start to believe that nothing can possibly go wrong is often the moment when you are in the most danger.

Virgo | Aug. 23 - Sept. 22.

The more you want something to happen today the more likely it is you will overreach yourself and make a serious mistake.

Libra | Sept. 23 - Oct. 22.

You will be on the move in some fashion today. Where you go and what you do is entirely up to you but, for best results, try to make it some place that inspires you mentally, emotionally and spiritually too.

Scorpio | Oct. 23 - Nov. 21.

You will be in a dreamy mood today but you need to be serious too, especially about money issues which involve other people.

Sagittarius | Nov. 22 - Dec. 21.

Partners and colleagues will grant any favor you ask of them today — so ask away!

Capricorn | Dec. 22 - Jan. 20.

Resist the urge to rush things, especially on the work front where you won't do your reputation much good if you do too much too quickly and make silly mistakes.

Aquarius | Jan. 21 - Feb. 18.

Jupiter, planet of good fortune, moves in your favour today but that does not mean you can do as you please.

Pisces | Feb. 19 - March 20.

Be wary of people who try to baffle you by introducing facts and figures that have no relevance to what you are working on.
